

Erosion-deposition pattern inside the harbor

The model successfully computed the erosion-deposition pattern inside the Crescent City harbor during the 2011 tsunami.

The result shows that the model is capable of simulating tsunami-induced morphological changes over complex bathymetries and in the existence of structures and hard bottom regions, although the largest observed erosions are underestimated.

